

The diploma paper „Christianity in the modern Europe“ thesis about form of christianity in the european countries. These countries are Poland, Ireland, The Czech Republic, Netherlands, Germany and Italy. The emphasis of this article is situated in the derived analysis of international survey European Value Study from 1999. The basic theoretical resources are taken from classic theory of deconsecration, which availability is broken from present point of view. In the first part of diploma paper is describe methodology, which is based on interview with christian vicars. Then ensues analysis of theoretical connections (definiton of religion, God, belief and christian worths). For global comprehension of present form of christianity in analyzed countries, is as the next chapter, chapter about history, concretely about the important moments of history of each country. In the derived analysis is described differences between Christians from analyzed countries. These differences are in controversial topics (homosexuality, suicide, abortion, divorce and euthanasia), in political view, in practising of faith and in the concrete articles, which are subjects of Christians belief. The diploma paper describes demographic profile of christians too. Globally diploma paper straves to refer to invalidity of classic theory of deconsecration. The kind of religionism is changing and christianity faith is only about observance of institutional rules, which are different from state to state. And this is the reason, why are differences between christians from other states in topic, in which should theoretical exists agreement.
